

The FCC decision not to forbid Sinclair broadcasting to air a clearly political smear of John Kerry two weeks before the election is an indefensible act. The blatant political content of this anti-Kerry film is a pure and simple use of the public airways for a partisan message meant to help re-elect Bush. Under the Bush administration, concentration of media has become an increasing problem the must be addressed by a new administration. This blatant and cynical attempt by Sinclair to sway the election to protect their control of the FCC is contrary to law, and fundamentally unfair.

Shame, shame, shame on the FCC.
